

Instructor: Date:

Learner: Regional Branch:

Program: Center:

CONTENT

- Let's Start! • Let's Explore! • Let's Practice! • Extension Activity • Target Words • Learning Points

Let's Start!

Let's review!

Learning Outcome

Analyze issues relating to different topics and their solution written and spoken situations according to work and social contexts.

Can Do Statements

- I can talk about my work responsibilities.
- I can express necessity, duty, and advice.
- I can ask someone to do something.

Ask your partner:

- Do you think being organized at work is very important? Why or why not?
- What happens if a person is not well organized?
- Can you be too organized? How?

Let's Explore!

Boris tells Adam and Kristi what to do when a project comes to fruition

* If something comes to "fruition" it means it is successfully put into action and completed, often after a long process.

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

- Boris: And here we are back to your offices. Did Ms. Moore mention you would be sharing space with a few co-workers?
- Kristi: Yes, she did.
- Boris: Great. You mustn't be concerned by that. We want to promote a collaborative work environment. You ought to meet them as soon as possible. I'll have your co-workers introduced to you tomorrow.
- Kristi: Oh, that's no problem at all.
- Boris: How are your organizational skills?
- Adam: Hmmm ... I'm not really sure.
- Boris: You'll need to devote some time to establishing general organization techniques that work for you, such as how to arrange your files and who to contact for specific information. You should include some flexibility in your system.
- Kristi: I understand.
- Boris: Next, you will need to adopt planning strategies. As editorial assistants, planning is particularly important, especially in relation to project management. Projects get divided into many different tasks. Sometimes, each task has got to be completed before the next one can begin. You must plan your tasks ahead of time to bring the project to fruition. You mustn't lose track of any part of the project. It really helps to be detail-oriented. I'll have Ms. Moore talk to you more about that.
- Adam: Ok.
- Boris: You should try to make good use of scheduling. Scheduling involves allocating a time period for specific tasks or workload, and then assigning tasks. As we've mentioned before, this is a deadline-based industry. In order to respect due dates, effective time management techniques have to be used.

Let's Practice!

Boris mentioned some key words. What were they?

Instructions: Tick the correct answer.

1. The people you work with are known as your ...
 - collaborators
 - co-workers
 - organizers
2. If you are giving a large part of one's time or resources to an activity, you are _____ your time to it.
 - devoting
 - making use of
 - planning
3. _____ is organizing the work of different people contributing to a large project.
 - time management
 - organization techniques
 - project management
4. Someone who is able to easily make changes is showing ...
 - organization
 - detectability
 - flexibility
5. If you are _____, you are attentive to small details.
 - detail-oriented
 - planning ahead
 - keeping track

Let's Practice!

Boris tells Adam and Kristi what he expects of them.

Instructions: Organize the mystery sentence. Re-write the sentences correctly.

1. introduced / tomorrow. / your co-workers / I'll have / to you

2. into many / Projects / different tasks. / get divided

3. to be / before the / can begin. / Sometimes, / has got / each task / completed / next one

4. talk to / about that. / Ms. Moore / I'll have / you more

5. right away. / I'll get / looked at / this idea

Extension Activity

Write a letter to help a friend or classmate get better organized.

Instructions: Complete the following steps. Fill in the Self-Assessment.

- Ask 5 friends or classmates to describe a problem of organization they may have at work. For example, do they arrive late? Do they lose things? Do they forget meetings?
- Think about what advice could help each person with each problem.
- Go online to find ideas to help people be organized.
- Choose one person to help. Write a letter of 100 - 150 words to that person giving suggestions about how improve their organizational skills.
- Proofread your letter. Make sure you use correct spelling and punctuation.
- Read your letter aloud.

Self-Assessment

Yes

No

I talk to people about about organization at work.

☐ ☐

I read suggestions for improving organization at work.

☐ ☐

I write a letter giving advice.

☐ ☐

Target Words

- to devote (verb): to give all or a large part of one's time or resources to a person, activity, or cause
e.g. You'll need to devote some time to establishing general organization techniques that work for you, such as how to arrange your files and who to contact for specific information.
- co-worker (noun): colleague; a person you work with e.g. Did Ms. Moore mention you would be sharing space with a few co-workers?
- flexibility (noun): the state of being flexible; able to easily make changes e.g. You should include some flexibility in your system.
- detail-oriented (adjective): attentive to small details
e.g. It really helps to be detail-oriented.
- project management (noun): organizing the work of different people contributing to a large project
e.g. As editorial assistants, planning is particularly important, especially in relation to project management.

Learning Points

Causative Get and Have in the Active Pattern

The causative form is used when we don't perform an action by ourselves, and we arrange for somebody else to do it.

You can use causative get and have in active and passive voices.

When you use causative get and have in the active voice, it has the meaning of "cause or order someone to do something".

The structure is:

get + person + infinitive (to + verb)

have + person + verb (infinitive without to)

Causative have:

Example:

My boss has me write his speeches.

Causative get:

Example:

My friends got me to make the presentation.

There is a slight difference in meaning between get and have in this structure. When you get someone to do something for you, it implies that you need to convince them in some way.

When you have someone do something, it means that you are giving the responsibility to someone else to do something.

When you use the get and have in a passive voice, it has the meaning of "arrange for someone else to do something". You use this structure when you want to express that you pay or ask someone to do something for you.

The structures are:

get + object + past participle

have + object + past participle

For example:

I have to get my jacket cleaned. (It means that somebody else is going to clean the jacket.)

She has her guitar fixed in the city. (It means that somebody else fixes the guitar.)

Learning Points

When you use the passive, you come across less direct and therefore more polite.

Examples:

- I'll have your co-workers introduced to you tomorrow.
- Projects get divided into many different tasks.
- Sometimes, each task has got to be completed before the next one can begin.

Modals to Express Necessity, Duty and Advice

When you want to express your opinion about what is right and what is wrong, you use the modals should and ought to.

You use the modals must, need and their negatives mustn't and needn't to talk about what is necessary and not necessary.

In a workplace setting, there are opportunities to discuss duties and to give advice to others.

For example:

You should take this job seriously. (= it's your duty)

Drivers ought to be more considerate on the road. (=it's their duty)

You really shouldn't be handing in reports late. (= strong advice criticism)

You need to make sure that the context of the comment is right, otherwise you come across as condescending and rude.

You use must and mustn't when you decide for yourself what is necessary.

For example:

You mustn't keep asking for my help all the time. (= I don't want you to)

I really must be going. (I think I must)

You can also use must and mustn't for impersonal necessity (something that is imposed upon you).

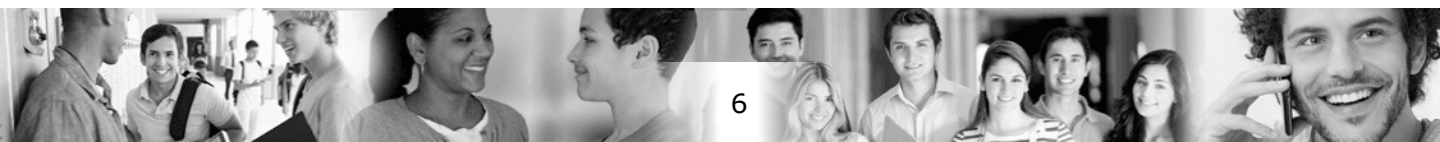

For example:

The screw must be tight for it to hold.

You use need and needn't to talk about something that is / is not necessary to be done.

You need to inform us about any emergencies that prevent you from being at work.

You needn't come to dinner if you don't want to. (In this example, the authority comes from the speaker).

Learning Points

Examples:

- You mustn't be concerned by that.
- You'll need to devote some time to establishing general organization techniques that work for you, such as how to arrange your files and who to contact for specific information.
- Next, you will need to adopt planning strategies.
- You must plan your tasks ahead of time to bring the project to fruition.
- You mustn't lose track of any part of the project.

